WRAPPED BREAD FIGHT IS WON

Herald's Campaign for Sanitary Method Adopted by Three Bakeries.

PROPER WEIGHT TO COME

Standardization of Loaf Is Expected to Follow Successful Contest for Clean Food.

Announcement by three Washington bakeries that, beginning June 1, they will deliver wrapped bread, marks the successful issue of the campaign which The Washington Herald has waged to obtain for the people of the District bread protected from dirt and disease from the time it leaves the ovens until it is delivered to the ultimate consumer.

The closely aligned campaign of The Washington Herald for standardization of the weight of loaves will soon come to a successful issue, too. Then the people of the Capital will be assured that every loaf they buy is clean and as much as it is pretended to be.

The determination of the bakers to wrap bread at their bakeries comes as the result of instant appeals on the part of The Washington Herald and residents of the Capital, who became interested in the campaign.

While the need of wrapping bread to protect it from disease bearing dirt appeared to many people of the District as soon as it was pointed out, there was at first a large part of the population that remained indifferent.

This indifference retarded the progress of the campaign somewhat. One prominent baker installed bread-wrapping machinery and put protected bread upon the market, but soon afterward he announced that the innovation apparently was not attractive to his customers. He, therefore, discontinued the practice.

Advocates of the sanitary means of distributing bakery products did not discontinue their efforts, however. The dangers incident to the use of bread subjected to a long and hot handling from the time it left the oven, and to the germ-laden dust during its transportation from the bakery to the consumer, were pointed out at every opportunity.

Examples of the benefits derived in other cities from the protection of bread from contamination were put before the people until they were convinced a realization that disease and death might lurk in the main food of man. Then came the requirement of the people that their bread should be wrapped.

The response to this demand was made heartily by the bakers. Standardization of loaf is expected to come in the very near future. The District officials, it is believed, now have ample authority to require that loaves of bread sold at certain prices shall contain a minimum number of ounces. With the application of this authority, the problem easily will be solved.

CLEAN UP TO CONTINUE.

Committee to Meet Tuesday for the Purpose of Discussing Plans.

The clean city committee will meet in the board room of the Municipal Building next Tuesday afternoon, at 4:45 o'clock, to discuss plans for keeping the city clean during the summer months. Members also will take up schemes for increasing the efficiency of the committee. A program of instructions for better sanitary conditions may be drawn and recommended to the Commissioners. William H. Richardson, chairman of the committee, has called the meeting.

At the time of the last annual report they were 32 public rest room stations in the world, of which the United States had 12, Great Britain 4, and Canada 2.
